

REPORT ON THE YAZIDI GENOCIDE: MAPPING ATROCITY IN IRAQ AND SYRIA

Abstract: This report outlines ISIS' transgressions against the Yazidi Community in Iraq and Syria. The report recounts a brief history of the Yazidi people and their culture. The report also provides documentation of existing evidence SAP compiled. The report asserts ISIS' actions are properly considered genocide. At its conclusion, the report calls on the international community to prioritize holding ISIS fighters responsible for the heinous actions perpetrated against the Yazidi Community in the summer of 2014.

METHODOLOGY

The Syrian Accountability Project (SAP) is a student-run, internationally recognized organization based out of the Syracuse University College of Law. It utilizes open-source news and other widely available media, as well as direct contacts within the Levant to document crimes occurring within the Syrian conflict under international legal standards. Its purpose is to advocate on behalf of the victims of the conflict, and to provide legal analysis to aid in the eventual administration of transitional justice. SAP’s two primary deliverables are the Conflict Narrative and the Crime Base Matrix.

“Those most responsible for these crimes continue to haunt the Yazidi community with alarming impunity.”

The Conflict Narrative is designed to show the wealth of information collected daily occurring within the region. This includes legally relevant information, a historical narration of the conflict, and geopolitical developments affecting the conflict. With a conflict of the scale seen in Syria, it is difficult to charge every crime that has been committed, but through representational charging we can ensure each type of offense committed in each region is represented in the ultimate indictments. It is best understood as the broadest net in our data collection efforts and is intended to serve as a general guide for future investigations regarding the types of incidents seen every day of the conflict for which information was available.

The Crime Base Matrix is designed to help a future prosecution team begin the work of “representational charging.” We strive to make it easier for a future team to build a case and provide justice through the scope of the indictments. Accordingly, the Crime Base Matrix demonstrates the frequency and scale of specific war crimes and crimes against humanity, serving as the raw material for future indictments. While it includes information specific enough to identify the location and nature of an offense, it is not an absolute assertion that an incident could be proven before a tribunal. Rather, it is a compilation of incidents relative to those sections of applicable law which we identified in our research. It is not exhaustive, and is best understood as a starting point for future efforts rather than a finished product.

The same methods SAP applies to instances occurring within the Syrian borders, were applied in the case of crimes committed against the Yazidi people in late summer 2014 in Iraq. These instances were applied to the relevant legal authorities: the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, the Geneva Conventions, and the Iraqi Penal Code.

INTRODUCTION

The Yazidi community spreads over many states in the Middle East, but the population centers in Iraq. The Yazidi community endured a lengthy history of persecution. More recently, the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS) targeted the Yazidis with incomparable brutality. The Yazidi community in Iraq endured grim incidences of wanton killings, rape, war crimes, crimes against humanity, and now genocide.

The following Conflict Map paints a picture of the historical persecution of the Yazidi people, as well as the atrocities inflicted on the community in August 2014. The aim of this Conflict Map is to explain the struggles the Yazidi community faced, and note that those most responsible for these crimes continue to haunt the Yazidi community with alarming impunity.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The Yazidi Community

The Yazidis are a Kurdish speaking ethno-religious group living primarily in Northern Iraq. The Yazidi community also populates diaspora communities in other parts of the Middle East, as well as in Germany and in the United States.<sup>1</sup> 2011 estimates show the Yazidi community in Iraq once consisted of about 500,000 to 600,000 people, and the diaspora population consisted of an additional 200,000 people.<sup>2</sup> The Yazidi culture and belief is largely disseminated orally.<sup>3</sup> In contrast to the three Abrahamic religions, the Yazidi people have not memorialized their faith and traditions in a written form.

The name “Yazidi” is thought to emanate from Yazid ibn Muawiya, the second Caliph of the Omayyad Dynasty.<sup>4</sup> Some stories say this character killed the families of both Imam al-Husayn ibn and the nephew of the Prophet Muhammad in Kerbela.<sup>5</sup> Other historical scholars indicate Yazidi is a derivative of the Persian term ized.<sup>6</sup> There are many assertions that vary as to the Yazidis’ origin.<sup>7</sup> Some Yazidi commentators claim the Yazidi are Kurdish in origin because they speak the Kurdish language, while others believe the Yazidi originally came from Iran.<sup>8</sup> Many argue the Yazidis’ origin is from the words Yezdan or Ezid.<sup>9</sup> Others state the Yazidi came from Umayyad Caliph Yazid who carried the title Sultan Ezi.<sup>10</sup>

Yazidi people belong to different groups within the Yazidi culture. The priestly families include the Sheikh who chair the majority of religious festivals or the Pir, and celebrate baptisms, weddings, and funerals.<sup>11</sup> The lay families sometimes serve the religious families. A large portion of the Yazidi community tends to be less affluent, and their society follows a caste system.<sup>12</sup>

Yazidi society is also insular in nature.<sup>13</sup> Consequently, Yazidis tend to only marry within the community.<sup>14</sup> Yazidi people are born into their faith, and conversion to the religion is not possible.<sup>15</sup>

The Yazidis have one of the oldest religions, and believe they were the first people in the Garden of Eden.<sup>16</sup> The Yazidi religion played an influential role in the foundations of the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Jewish civilizations in the Middle East.<sup>17</sup> Additionally, many of the Yazidi's practices including circumcision, not consuming pork products, prayer at designated times of the day, and baptism, can be found in the faith traditions of Islam, Judaism, and Christianity.<sup>18</sup> Yazidis believe in reincarnation, which may at times involve the religious process of consecration.<sup>19</sup> The Yazidi religion, like most religions, involves a belief in hell and heaven. Hell is reserved for judgment for those who did not lead a pure life, while heaven is a reward for those who kept the faith and observed the religious teachings.<sup>20</sup> Yazidis pray five times a day while facing the sun and have set aside Wednesday as a day of worship.<sup>21</sup>

The Yazidi religion involves the belief that God created the world, and entrusted the world to seven angels.<sup>22</sup> The most important of those angels is Tawsi Melek, the Peacock Angel.<sup>23</sup> Members of the Yazidi community believe Tawsi Melek was an angel that defied God, but was eventually forgiven, and entrusted to serve as an intermediary between God and his people.<sup>24</sup> Yazidis believe the Peacock Angel is an emanation of the Supreme God, and while the Peacock Angel is not the Supreme God himself, he is inseparable from the Supreme God as an emanation. This is similar to the idea of the Holy Trinity in Christianity.<sup>25</sup> In some variations of Islam, this story bears a resemblance to the Islamic version of Satan.<sup>26</sup> However, two traditions view of the Peacock Angel differs in a fundamental way. As stated, in the Yazidi religion, the Peacock Angel eventually reconciles with God and serves as his intermediary to earth. As such, the Yazidi see the Peacock Angel as a force of good.<sup>27</sup> In the Islamic story, Tawsi Melek never reconciles with God and is therefore seen as a demonic and evil force, similar to the Christian Satan.<sup>28</sup> Thus, ISIS has used this as the basis for their narrative that the Yazidis are “devil worshipers.”<sup>29</sup>

In part because of theological differences, the Yazidis are a widely misrepresented and misunderstood minority group in the Middle East. Al-Qaida, and later ISIS, called Yazidi community members “infidels” and forced them to convert to Islam or be killed. Later, ISIS warped the Yazidi historical stories in such a way that their combatants consider the Yazidi people to be “spoils of war.”<sup>30</sup> This scheme of stereotypes and misinformation created a foundation for ISIS’ persecution of the Yazidi community.<sup>31</sup>

The Yazidi people have long bore the burden of religious persecution against their faith and traditions.<sup>32</sup> It is estimated that twenty-three million Yazidis died from persecutions against their ethno-religious background within the past 700 years.<sup>33</sup> During the sixteenth century, violence against the Yazidis began to rise as other communities in the region considered the Yazidis to be rivals for power.<sup>34</sup> Massacres and forced conversions whittled away the Yazidi population.<sup>35</sup> Notably, violent anti-Yazidi campaigns were common under Ottoman rule.<sup>36</sup> In recent years, a surge of violence against the group has again emerged alongside increased tensions in the region.<sup>37</sup> Estimates show the Yazidi community faced nearly seventy-three campaigns of violence and persecution over the course of their history.<sup>38</sup> Recognition of, and respect for, the historic persecution of the Yazidi community developed as a component of the Yazidi community's resilient identity.<sup>39</sup> party came into power in 1968, leading the way for the election of a prominent party member, Saddam Hussein, as President in 1978.<sup>42</sup> Hussein quickly consolidated power and eliminated dissent. After the Iranian Revolution, Iraq declared war on Iran leading to a devastating decade's long war with at least half a million people being killed.<sup>43</sup> Towards the end of the war, Hussein and the Baathist Party launched the Anfal campaign, a genocidal campaign against the Iraqi Kurds.<sup>44</sup> The campaign aimed to eliminate the Kurds in the region, and it involved the use of chemical weapons, aerial bombing runs, and mass executions to kill upwards of 180,000 Iraqi Kurds.<sup>45</sup> In the early 2000s, western governments and the United States accused Hussein of stockpiling chemical weapons and other weapons of mass destruction.<sup>46</sup>

In March 2003, a United States-led (U.S.) coalition invaded Iraq with the goal of stopping the Iraqi president Saddam Hussein from continuing to maintain an alleged stockpile of weapons of mass destruction.<sup>47</sup> By May 2003, then U.S. President George W. Bush declared an end to combat operations in Iraq and the fall of Hussein leadership.<sup>48</sup> The coalition forces spent the rest of 2003 finding and capturing remnants of the old leadership.<sup>49</sup>

After toppling Saddam Hussein's leadership, the U.S. established an administrative presence in Iraq.<sup>50</sup> Ba'ath Party members, who were mainly Sunni and previously held power under Hussein, were barred from participating in the formation of the new government.<sup>51</sup> The distrust was evident as the new Shia-led government held the Sunnis responsible for all of the country's problems under Saddam Hussein.<sup>52</sup> Some Sunni Muslims felt disenfranchised and regrouped with senior security officials from the Hussein regime.<sup>53</sup> They formed an insurgent outfit that later attacked the coalition forces and the new government establishment.<sup>54</sup>

By spring 2004, the U.S. forces began an offensive against a rising insurgence of rebel groups in Iraq that resulted in combat operations across the country for several years.<sup>55</sup> One of these battles was the Battle of Mosul in December 2004.<sup>56</sup> U.S. and allied forces, including the Peshmerga Kurdish Forces, suffered high casualties in the battles.<sup>57</sup> Groups fighting U.S. forces included Abu Musab al-Zarqawi's<sup>58</sup> insurgent group and eventually ISIS.<sup>59</sup> Zarqawi and his paramilitary group intensified attacks during the spring 2005 elections.<sup>60</sup> Thousands of Iraqis were killed and coalition forces suffered massive casualties.<sup>61</sup>

Due to the insurgency, President Bush authorized a surge of U.S. forces in January 2007.<sup>62</sup> The surge aimed to help push out the rebels and regain control of lost territory in Iraq.<sup>63</sup> Later in the year, U.S. leaders argued the surge effectively regained control.<sup>64</sup> However, in May 2007, the Iraqi parliament voted to end occupation of Iraq.<sup>65</sup> The next year, the U.S. set a timetable for its withdrawal.<sup>66</sup> Over the next two years, the U.S. began training and arming Iraqi forces in preparation for the transfer of power.<sup>67</sup> In February 2009, President Barack Obama announced the beginning of the American withdrawal from Iraq.<sup>68</sup> In December 2011, the last of the U.S. combat forces left Iraq and Iraqi defense was turned over to the Iraqi government.<sup>69</sup>

The transition of authority led to a power vacuum in Iraq.<sup>70</sup> This vacuum gave ample room for an insurgency, allowing the Sunni militia in the country to reemerge with a vengeance.<sup>71</sup> Iraq became increasingly less stable in 2012 and 2013, and the culmination of the Arab Spring in 2011, as well as the intensifying conflict in the Syrian Civil War, led to more protests and violence.<sup>72</sup>

Emergence of ISIS in Iraq

ISIS' origins can be traced to 1999 when Jordanian Abu Musab al-Zarqawi (Zarqawi), founded the group called Jamā'at al-Tawḥīd wa-al-Jihād.<sup>73</sup> Zarqawi's goal was to overthrow the Jordanian monarchy and gain control over the rest of the Levant.<sup>74</sup> The start of the United States' invasion of Iraq shifted the group's focus to Iraq. In October 2004, Zarqawi pledged allegiance to Osama bin Laden and al-Qaida.<sup>75</sup> Zarqawi's organization continued under his leadership until a U.S. airstrike killed him in June 2006.<sup>76</sup> After Zarqawi's death, the remnants of his organization, along with other radical groups in Iraq, formed the Islamic State of Iraq as an al-Qaida affiliate.<sup>77</sup> Abu Omar al-Baghdadi led the organization until his death in 2010 during a U.S. airstrike.<sup>78</sup> His successor was Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi (Baghdadi), the current leader of ISIS.

In 2013, Baghdadi merged the group with Jabhat al-Nusra Front in Syria and changed the name to the Islamic State of Iraq and al-Sham.<sup>79</sup> A power struggle then ensued between al-Nusra and ISIS resulting in al-Nusra disavowing any ties to ISIS.<sup>80</sup> In June 2014, ISIS declared a worldwide caliphate.<sup>81</sup>

PERSECUTION OF THE YAZIDI COMMUNITY

In the wake of ISIS' territorial gains, the Kurdish Peshmerga forces in Sinjar did not stop ISIS from advancing in the summer of 2014.<sup>95</sup> This left the Yazidi community largely unprotected as members of ISIS mercilessly attacked entire families in Sinjar.<sup>96</sup> ISIS previously disenfranchised the Yazidi community when they took two nearby small oil fields and the town of Zumar.<sup>97</sup> This was part of a plan to seize Mosul's hydroelectric dam. ISIS then captured Sinjar and the surrounding towns.<sup>98</sup>

In Sinjar, ISIS destroyed a Shi'ite shrine and demanded the remaining population convert to their denomination of Islam, pay jizya (a religious tax), or be executed.<sup>99</sup> Up to 200,000 people, including an estimated 40,000 to 50,000 Yazidis, fled before ISIS

Yazidi civilians in Sinjar reported kidnappings and executions of fellow Yazidi civilians. Civilian witnesses described being targeted for killing because they identified as Yazidi.<sup>106</sup>

ISIS kept more than 2000 women in captivity near Sinjar.<sup>111</sup> Three of those women stated that ISIS forced pregnant Yazidi women in captivity to have abortions.<sup>112</sup> Forced abortions prevented the births of Yazidi babies with two Yazidi parents.<sup>113</sup> ISIS utilized “gynecologists” to determine whether Yazidi women were already pregnant.<sup>114</sup> ISIS also used these “gynecologists” to perform forced inspection of Yazidi women as a way to determine whether they were virgins.<sup>115</sup> A Yazidi woman held in captivity reported an ISIS fighter showed her a letter which stated: “any captured woman will become Muslim if [ten] ISIS fighters rape her.”<sup>116</sup> Eleven ISIS fighters summarily raped her.<sup>117</sup> Yazidi men were taken to ISIS “courts” and forced to convert to Islam or face punishment.<sup>118</sup> Many of these men were executed for refusing to convert.<sup>119</sup>

Yazidi civilians fleeing the village of Matu reported seeing the bodies of 200 children who had died from environmental exposure and dehydration.<sup>126</sup> In Tal Afar, 200 Yazidi men and five elderly Yazidi men were executed for refusing religious conversion.<sup>127</sup> Women and girls above the age of five were taken captive and transferred to Mosul.<sup>128</sup> Two hundred women and children were taken captive in Tal Binat.<sup>129</sup> Yazidi civilians fleeing violence in Qiniyeh were robbed of their belongings.<sup>130</sup> Those fleeing were also separated based on age and gender.<sup>131</sup> Seventy to ninety men were taken to a prepared mass grave site and summarily executed.<sup>132</sup>

Yazidi leader, Tasheen Said, issued a call for help to world leaders in the aftermath of ISIS' advances.<sup>139</sup> Responses came through in the upcoming days, but the loss and devastation revealed an unspeakable atrocity.<sup>140</sup> Reports from Sinjar stated at least 40,000 members of the Yazidi sect took refuge in nine locations on Mount Sinjar.<sup>141</sup>

In al-Qahtaniya, ISIS pursued ten fleeing Yazidi families, killed all the males and kidnapped the females and children.<sup>142</sup> ISIS shot seventy to ninety Yazidi men in Qiniyeh village.<sup>143</sup>

In Kocho, ISIS besieged the village and gave an ultimatum to resident Yazidis that they either convert to Islam or face death.<sup>144</sup> As the Sinjar Massacre began, ISIS members killed 2,000 to 5,000 men.<sup>145</sup> Yazidi civilians reported two Yazidi men were executed, and ISIS fighters bound and held approximately ten Yazidi families captive.<sup>146</sup> ISIS threatened Yazidis who remained in Sinjar, stating they would be forced to convert or be killed.<sup>147</sup> ISIS Twitter accounts subsequently revealed images of summary executions of civilians. ISIS' actions as genocidal.<sup>218</sup> Many legal scholars also acknowledge ISIS's actions against the Yazidi community as genocide.<sup>219</sup>

In accordance with the determinations of the U.S., the U.K., the U.N., and others, an International Tribunal may eventually examine ISIS' actions against the Yazidi based on the elements of genocide. The Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide ("Genocide Convention"), defines the crime of genocide as:

any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such: (a) killing members of the group; (b) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; (c) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; (d) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; or (e) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.<sup>220</sup>

In Prosecutor v. Akayesu,<sup>221</sup> the defendant faced accusations of the crime of genocide and complicity in genocide following the 1994 Rwandan genocide.<sup>222</sup> Article 2(3)(a) of the Statute of the International Tribunal for Rwanda governs these crimes.<sup>223</sup> The tribunal found the defendant guilty, and held genocide under the Genocide Convention requires a specific "intent to destroy in whole or part a national, ethnic, racial, or religious group.”<sup>224</sup> Essentially, they found genocide requires some degree of premeditation to destroy a community.<sup>225</sup> Finally, and of consequence to the Yazidi people, the tribunal held imposing measures “intended to prevent births within a group, . . . [such as] sexual mutilation, the practice of sterilization, forced birth control, separation of sexes and prohibition of marriages,” constitutes genocide.<sup>226</sup>

ISIS fighters subjected the Yazidi community to the most unimaginable crimes in an atrocious genocide campaign. Genocide is unique among core international crimes because it requires some degree of planning.<sup>227</sup> Thus, when proving a specific intent crime, the international community must locate an evidentiary “smoking gun” which clearly shows the perpetrator intended to cause the destruction of a community, either in whole or in part.<sup>228</sup>

The intent to destroy is evident from the horrific crimes ISIS perpetrated against the Yazidi community.<sup>229</sup> The crimes ISIS committed against the Yazidi people are heinous and an affront to human dignity. The stories underlying these crimes provide the evidentiary support necessary to demonstrate ISIS executed a systemic plan to destroy, in whole or in part, the Yazidi people.<sup>230</sup> ISIS perpetrated violence against women; they kidnapped, they raped, they forced conversion to Islam, they forced the use of contraception, and they forced abortions, all with frightening regularity.<sup>231</sup> ISIS soldiers regularly demonstrated a specific intent to destroy the Yazidi people through their ideology and unabashed assertions for eliminating the Yazidi community.

The human trafficking market is one of the most harrowing examples of ISIS' genocidal actions against the Yazidi community.<sup>232</sup> ISIS members forced Yazidi women into marriages and then trafficked these women across the Levant.<sup>233</sup> Yazidi survivors report they were forced to convert to ISIS' version of Islam, and were subsequently married to ISIS soldiers.<sup>234</sup> Survivors also report ISIS soldiers systematically raped and sold Yazidi women into slavery.<sup>235</sup> ISIS members make distinctions between women of different religious sects and discriminate against those who they perceive to be pagans or polytheists.<sup>236</sup> According to ISIS' views, those in the latter group can be enslaved because they do not believe in the same religion as ISIS soldiers.<sup>237</sup> There are no justifications for the destruction of the Yazidi community.

Yazidi survivors have recounted how ISIS conducted its human trafficking operation. Upon capture, ISIS divided Yazidi women into multiple groups: woman who were married with children, woman who were married without children, and unmarried woman and girls.<sup>238</sup> The names of the women and girls ISIS captured were assembled into a list.<sup>239</sup> ISIS members inspected the women and girls and rated them according to their perceived beauty.<sup>240</sup> During this process, women were forced to strip off their clothing and remove their head scarves as ISIS members photographed them.<sup>241</sup> After inspection, some women were given away as gifts.<sup>242</sup> Others were sold after price negotiations about their "worth" in the human trafficking industry.<sup>243</sup> Women in the early stages of pregnancy were forced to have abortions.<sup>244</sup> Accounts from witnesses claim ISIS soldiers said “we do not want any more Yazidis to be born.”<sup>245</sup> Women were reportedly sold for marriage following forced abortions, preventing women in captivity from giving birth to future Yazidi children.<sup>246</sup>

The international community knows ISIS soldiers tried to destroy the Yazidi community as they captured new territories in Iraq.<sup>247</sup> According to the terms of Resolution 2379 from September 2017, the United Nations Security Council asked the Secretary-General to gather an independent legal mechanism to help hold ISIS accountable for crimes in Iraq.<sup>248</sup> This independent team of international criminal experts will investigate the crimes ISIS perpetrated in Iraq.<sup>249</sup> These investigations include the crimes committed against the Yazidi community in August 2014.<sup>250</sup> The survivors of the Yazidi Genocide need to know the world will not stand for impunity in the face of atrocities.<sup>251</sup>

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

Volunteers from the Yazidi community, the Peshmerga, and the PKK-related factions, helped retake territories near Sinjar and stayed in the area to protect it from ISIS forces.<sup>252</sup> Human Rights Watch visited seven sights of mass graves north of Mount Sinjar in August 2016.<sup>253</sup> These teams found the sights of the mass graves unprotected in ways that, without proper care, may eventually compromise the evidence of large-scale executions of Yazidi community members.<sup>254</sup> After ISIS lost control of territories near Sinjar, some Yazidi people returned to their homes.<sup>255</sup> Nevertheless, many Yazidi families feared returning to their homes while conflicts between the Peshmerga, PKK-related factions, KRG forces, and Iraqi forces developed over time.<sup>256</sup>

Yazidi community members still face degrees of regional instability, internal displacement, and political misrepresentation, as conflict continues to spread throughout Iraq.<sup>257</sup> The Kurdish Peshmerga forces withdrew from Sinjar in the wake of ISIS' August 2014 attacks.<sup>258</sup> Such abandonment left some distrust and animosity in the air.<sup>259</sup> Yazidi people once under the protection of Kurdish authorities may hold onto feelings of betrayal or abandonment.<sup>260</sup> Kurdish people acknowledge the Yazidi genocide and hold memorials on behalf of victims.<sup>261</sup> The Yazidi community may still struggle to gain political representation in the Kurdish Regional Government.<sup>262</sup> The KRG reserves seats for minority representation by quota, but these quotas exclude the Yazidis since they identify as Kurdish.<sup>263</sup> Seeking justice for Yazidi people must also allow for the preservation of the Yazidi culture and the security of their community.

In late September 2017, the Kurdish people in the northern region of Iraq, governed by the semi-autonomous Kurdish Regional Government, voted in a referendum for Kurdish Independence.<sup>264</sup> The vote was in favor of independence, and the Iraqi Kurdish population sought

RECOMMENDATIONS

Survivors of the Yazidi Genocide tell stories that are truly precious evidence. The international community must take proper care of the living proof that ISIS systematically destroyed part of the Yazidi community.<sup>269</sup> Additionally, the world must make an independent and collaborative effort to preserve the physical evidence of these crimes.<sup>270</sup> ISIS militants massacred entire communities in the summer of 2014, and still, much of the evidence of these atrocities remains in the Yazidi community's home lands.<sup>271</sup>

As this conflict map reveals, the crimes ISIS committed against the Yazidi people in August 2014 involved extraordinary violence. These atrocities were inconsistent with the legal practices of warfare.<sup>272</sup> Stories from survivors of the attacks on the Yazidi community serve as direct evidentiary material explaining how ISIS intended to destroy the Yazidi people.<sup>273</sup> Forensic evidence also exists, especially in the form of mass graves containing thousands of bodies of

Yazidis killed in territories ISIS once held.<sup>274</sup> Primary evidence of the genocide against the Yazidis must be gathered, documented, and preserved for the sake of international justice.<sup>275</sup>

While circumstantial evidence and news reports can be highly probative of genocidal intent, not all evidence is legally sufficient to support a declaration that genocide occurred.<sup>276</sup> Bringing ISIS to justice for genocide against the Yazidi community, at the domestic or the international level, will depend on the strategic preservation of forensic evidence.<sup>277</sup>

The international community cannot forget the stories of the Yazidi Genocide in the midst of continuing conflicts.<sup>278</sup> The horrific acts ISIS committed against the Yazidis fulfill the elements of multiple different and heinous international crimes.<sup>279</sup> Ultimately, after naming atrocities committed against the Yazidi people in the Levant as genocide, there must be accountability for the devastating loss inflicted upon the Yazidi community.<sup>280</sup> Holding ISIS accountable for the Yazidi Genocide necessitates the careful preservation of all available evidence as far as justice so requires.<sup>281</sup> The Yazidi community deserves justice and international recognition for their historic courage and perseverance.

Initial Accounts from the Yazidi Genocide in Iraq & Syria

The Syrian Accountability Project gathered the accounts of 9,120 Yazidi victims of violence in Iraq and Syria from August 2nd, 2014 to September 30, 2014. The actual number of victims that suffered during this tragic time is much larger.

ISIS kidnaps and exploits Yazidis in Iraq and Syria as a part of an ongoing Genocide campaign against the Yazidi culture. The Syrian Accountability Project's documents account for over 4,602 kidnappings of Yazidis in Iraq and Syria from August 2nd, 2014 to September 30, 2014. The actual number is much larger. Many individual victims endure more than one instance of violence during an attack.

Sexual Violence   Kidnappings   Executions   Exposure   Violence Against Children   Shellings   Other

"Kidnapping"

Kidnapping is the most common form of violence that ISIS uses against the Yazidis. Kidnapping is the unlawful abduction of a person or the unlawful transfer of a person without their consent.

"Unlawful Transfer"

Kidnapping, abducting, or otherwise unlawfully transferring people against their will, is a violation of international law. These actions violate Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions; Article 8(c) of the Rome Statute; and Article 422 of the Iraqi Penal Code.

The Yazidi Genocide began in August, 2014

- ISIS is responsible for a vast majority of the documented violence against Yazidis in the summer of 2014.
- ISIS specifically attacked the Yazidi communities in Nineveh, Iraq and extended this terror to Ar Raqqa, Syria.
- The Syrian Accountability Project's documents account for attacks in Nadia Murad's home city of Kocho, Iraq on August 3rd, 2014.

Incident Description	City	Date
ISIS besieged 1000 in village	Kocho	08/03/2014
450-500 women and girls were transferred in captivity; 150 of whom were later transferred to Syria to be sold as sex slaves.	Tal Afar	08/03/2014
1000 women & kids abducted	Kocho	08/15/2014
Women and children in captivity were transferred from Mosul to Raqqa, Syria to be sold as sex slaves.	Raqqa	08/31/2014

Places Victimized by ISIS in August, 2014:

ISIS kidnapped thousands of Yazidi women and children and sold them as sex slaves in Iraq and Syria. These actions violate Common Article 3(c) of the Geneva Conventions and Article 4(2)(e) of Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions; Article 7(g) of the Rome Statute; and Article 393 of the Iraqi Penal Code. Syrian Accountability Project documents reveal that the Yazidi community faced crimes against humanity. Nadia Murad's courageous story guides these records.

At least 20% of 9,120 recorded victims were children.

The Syrian Accountability Project's documents account for the victimization of 1,950 Yazidi children from August to September of 2014

At least 30% of 9,120 recorded victims did not survive.

2,843
The Syrian Accountability Project's documents account for the deaths of 2,843 Yazidi people from August to September of 2014.

Incident Description	City	Date
Exposure killed 12 Yazidi kids	Sinjar	08/03/2014
40 children died from violence and dehydration caused by displacement from the ongoing siege against Yazidis	Sinjar	08/06/2014

<sup>31</sup> Article 7(1)(k) of the Rome Statute includes “other inhumane acts” under crimes against humanity. The Appeals Chamber of the Special Court for Sierra Leone held that forced marriages in times of armed conflict was a crime against humanity. Thus, the crime associated with this section of the Rome Statute is forced marriage in times of armed conflict.
